Intra-Ocular Surgery

This course instructs postgraduate trainees in ophthalmology on the basic methodology required to perform intraocular surgery. It is based upon the book Intraocular Surgery a Basic Surgical Guide which investigates the common surgical required for any ophthalmological surgery. The subject material of each module has been carefully chosen to explain separate conceptual areas in surgery to allow easy understanding and rapid attainment of knowledge. The concepts can be transferred from one surgical method to another, giving the flexibility to adapt to new methods quickly. Using the book as the basis of learning the participants will receive monthly live online face-face sessions with the author to discuss the learning from the various chapters over a one-year period.

The course provides various insights to allow the development of a thoughtful and considered approach to surgery. It encourages the surgeon to more intelligently scrutinize which surgical methods to apply, and to utilize the most effective procedures in clinical practice. After reading this book, the trainee will be well-equipped to perform the simple steps of surgery, improving the overall quality of surgery.
